From the Principal's Desk

Some final thoughts as we finish our character focus on boldness. Who do you consider to be bold? The class clown who isn't afraid to look silly for a laugh? The confident person you work with who dominates every meeting?

Often, the qualities we associate with boldness could be better described as cheeky. Boldness is not rude, noisy, or overbearing. Boldness is an ability to take risks, and risk doesn't always come dressed in an adventure.

We don't have to look for opportunities to make a bold move. Everyday obedience will challenge us to live differently. Boldness is not forcing what we think should happen, but being willing to respond in obedience to what God puts in front of us. Queen Esther in the Old Testament is a great example of being bold.

Esther's boldness was not just an outward appearance but an inner confidence. She wasn't following a wild desire to "be bold." Her ability to risk death came from knowing she could trust the God who put her in this position for this reason.
